Organic fertilizers are a tender, better way to provide plants in plastic pots or, in the backyard the vital nutrients that they need.

It usually carries a mixture of nutrients that are essential to improve the soil ecosystem.

It last longer as it delivers the nutrients gently in the soil when the plants need them.

The nutrients hold various complex particles that don't drain away with the first rain/ or, during the rainy season.

They are less likely to hurt the tender roots of seedlings, while synthetic type fertilizers are mineral salts that can destroy roots if used, improperly.

They improve soil health by nourishing (or at least not hurting) the state of soil microbes.
