1. E-commerce Website
Any website that includes a shopping cart and a way for you to provide credit card information to make a purchase falls into this category. If you're setting up the website for the business and plan to sell your products through the site, then this is the type of website you need to build.

2. Business Website
A business website is any website that's devoted to representing a specific business. It should be branded as the business and communicate the types of products and services the business offers.

Every business should have a website. Every potential customer you encounter will just assume that if they Google your business looking for more information, they'll find a website. And if they don't, it makes the business look less professional. We are a leading website company in Mumbai which offers best website design and development services.

3. Entertainment Website

If you think about your internet browsing habits, you can probably think of a few websites that you visit purely for entertainment purposes. Most of these websites do aim to make money like business and e-commerce websites do, but usually through the advertisements that show up on the page rather than through selling specific products or services.

4. Portfolio Website

These sites are devoted to showing examples of past work. Service providers who want to show potential clients the quality of the work they provide can use a portfolio website to collect some of the best samples of past work they've done. This type of website is simpler to build than a business website and more focused on a particular task: collecting work samples.

5. Media Website

Media websites collect news stories or other reporting. There's some overlap here with entertainment websites, but media websites are more likely to include reported pieces in addition to or instead of content meant purely for entertainment. This category includes sites like the Washington Post website, Slate, and Inc.

6. Brochure Website

Brochure websites are a simplified form of business websites. For businesses that know they need an online presence, but don't want to invest a lot into it a simple brochure site that includes just a few pages that lay out the basics of what you do and provide contact information may be enough for you.

7. Nonprofit Website

A Nonprofit Website is the easiest way for many potential donors to make donations and will be the first place many people look to learn more about a nonprofit and determine if they want to support it. You can use it to promote the projects your organization tackles, encourage followers to take action, and for accepting donations.

8. Educational Website

The websites of educational institutions and those offering online courses fall into the category of educational websites. These websites have the primary goal of either providing educational materials to visitors or providing information on an educational institution to them.

9. Infopreneur Website

Such websites overlap a bit with business and e-commerce websites, but they represent a unique type of online business. Infopreneurs create and sell information products. That could be in the form of courses, tutorials, videos or ebooks.

10. Personal Website

This category includes personal blogs, photos or diaries people share with the world. Sometimes these websites can evolve into something that makes money if they become popular enough and the person who started them wants to make that shift, but they primarily exist as a way to share your feelings, insights, and art with any friends and strangers that might be interested.

11. Web Portal

Web portals are often websites designed for internal purposes at a business, organization, or institution. They collect information in different formats from different sources into one place to make all relevant information accessible to the people who need to see it. They often involve login and personalized views for different users that ensure the accessible information is most useful to their particular needs.

12. Wiki or Community Forum Website

Most people are familiar with wikis through the most famous example of one out there: Wikipedia. But wikis can be created on pretty much any subject you can imagine. A wiki is any website where various users can collaborate on content and all make their tweaks and changes as they see fit. There are wikis for fan communities, for business resources, and for collecting valuable information sources.
